

YOUR GAME HIT BETTER IRONS

CHUCK EVANS
Tiffany Greens G.C.,
Kansas City, Mo.
(Top 100 since 2009)

The New Way to Hit a Power Draw

Back-left pin! No sweat! Simply ditch your old-school setup for one that works.

Most recreational players dream of drawing the ball, but the reality is a steady diet of fades and pulls. The problem is that you're adhering to old-fashioned instruction, pointing your clubface at the target and aiming your stance out to the right. You got the stance part right, but since science has proven that your shots start closer to where your clubface points at impact than where your path is heading, your clubface angle at address is way off. Here's the correct way:

The old way of hitting draws didn't allow for the massive influence face angle has on starting direction. It sounds counter-intuitive, but you must point the face right of the target to pull off a successful draw.

Scan this photo
to watch a video of this lesson. See p. XX.

1. Point your clubface a few degrees to the right of your target, not at the target (yellow line, above).
2. Set your stance line (picture a line across the toe of each shoe) so that it points point even further right of where the clubface is aimed (blue line).

That's it. No need to swing aggressively from the inside or rotate your wrists through impact. Because your setup geometry is correct—and a match for modern ballflight laws—the ball will draw as if by magic.

ANDRUS HUBBARD [1]